

1. Jewish Chronicle 1890 – 1917. 25 Bound volumes.

Fishburn books is now offering a rare opportunity to purchase an extensive run of The Jewish Chronicle, the oldest Jewish periodical still in existence. The first issue of The Jewish Chronicle appeared on November 12, 1841 and except for a break of nearly two years between 1842 and 1844, it has been continuously published.

Under the editorial control of Asher Myers until 1902, the literary and intellectual side of the Chronicle was developed. Myers drew on a range of important Jewish writers and scholars including Joseph Jacobs, Israel Abrahams and Albert Hyamson. Myers introduced the lavish use of illustrations and portraits and there are 1000s of wonderful pictures throughout the collection. He also developed the Letters to the Editor section which features letters from prominent public figures such as Samuel Montagu and Israel Zangwill.

It was a period of radical social, political and religious challenges affecting world Jewry. During the years available in this collection, the Jewish Chronicle was the only agency in any country for the systematic collection and presentation of what was happening in the Jewish world around the globe.

The first article by Theodore Herzl, "A Solution to the Jewish Problem" was published in the issue of January 17th, 1896. Significant events such as the First Zionist Congress, the Dreyfus Affair and the Balfour Declaration were extensively reported. First hand accounts of the pogroms in Russia are detailed with accompanying pictures. As well as discussing important issues such the white slave trade, aguna and patterns of immigration, the Jewish Chronicle also helped to nurture important organizations such as Jewish Historical Society of England because their activities and research papers were widely published.

Interesting supplements include the November 13, 1891 Jubilee of the paper, the monthly Darkest Russia during 1891 and 1892, a modern Hebrew supplement and a history of Jews College during 1906.

Missing issues: Years Covered 1890 – 1917, missing January to July 1900, 1903 (whole year) and January and February 1904.

Please note: The volumes 1890 – 1899 have been bound complete. In the volumes from 1900 – 1917 the preliminary advertisement pages have removed before binding. Most volumes are in good condition, however I would be happy to discuss specifics with any interested parties. £7,500

Shelby was the Sheik of the Samaritans. The Jewish Chronicle of March 18th 1887 (pg 5) has a little report of a visit by him to London. "A distinguished visitor among us is no less an authority than the Sheik of the Samaritans Jacob esh Shelaby. He has come on a visit somewhat similar to the official "Messenger" who used to pay us periodic visits to seek aid. For it seems on this occasion that the Samaritans have fallen among thieves and the tax gatherers have reduced the whole of the Samaritan Community to a state of poverty. Some complaint has been made that the Jews of this country have given him no assistance. But as a matter of fact his claims have not been brought to the notice of the Jewish philanthropists, who would have been most willing to assist him. The idea that any survival of religious animus against the Samaritans still exists amongst us is preposterous in the extreme." Crown 2759. £265

Jehiel of Rome, but in fact, it is a path-finding contribution to Talmudic philology in which Kohut offers etymologies and additional sources which exhibit his wide knowledge of oriental and classical languages. In his introduction, he investigated the sources of the Arukh, the biographies of its author's teachers, and the quotations there from the works of early and late commentators.
